Assures Murat Halstead of Spain's Victory in the Near Future.

He Is Positive of the Near Approach of the Rebellion's Collapse.

He Has Ordered Translations of Correspondents' Articles in American Papers.

THEY WILL GOVERN HIS POLICY.

The Presence of American Ships in Havana Harbor Will Be Considered as a Friendly Visit by a Friendly Nation.

By Murat Halstead.

Havana, Feb. 19 .- I called on the Captain-General this afternoon and was received for the business purpose of finding out the true news. Immediately before me was a black workingman, who was respectfully heard. The Madrid dispatch that the peasants were ordered to concentrate in the villages or be treated as rebels was confirmed.

those ordered had arrived, and the question was asked whether it would be unprecedented for Spain to mobilize her reserves and throw them Into Cuba.

The answer was that It would be easy with Moroeco, and in the former Cuban war. Spain had still resources in men. They were perfectly willing to put in the reserves, but the Captain-General did not believe it necessary, for he was already gaining excellent results, and he was quite positive of the near approach of the collapse of the rebellion.

I alled the General's attention to attacks said such articles were inspired by correspondents who lean to the rebel cause and paint the Spanish side in colors as hard as possible. Some editorials published in is about twelve miles on the carriage road the United States make it appear as if from Havana, but the main body is conevery act of outrage, violence or incendiarism on the part of the insurgents was looked upon there as proper and with indifference, while every means of legitimate. warfare and all the civilized means adopted by the Spanish Government were

He knew that war had been made more civilized within his experience. There could not now be done things that were common sixty, fifty, or forty years ago. This progress had been rapid. There would be applied by the authorities of Spain all the rigors of the laws. The full force of the law would be satisfied, always taking into account existing civilization as observed by the enlightened nations.

The Captain-General said he had ordered translations from American journals, that was sent by the several correspondents and tablishment of Enrique Naste. adopt with knowledge a line of conduct toward them.

The reply was the Germans were here on a friendly visit while passing from place to place. The coming of American ships of war would not be considered to show an unfriendly purpose. What was proposed to be done to correct this

His Excellency thought his proclamations covered that and looked to their removing the terror of good people. The proclamations would be carried out to the atmost letter, and that policy should counterbalance the popular alarm referred to. The rebels should not find it to their advantage to behave outrageously, but would be checked by energetic methods. As to the treatment of prisoners, those who were taken with arms in hand would not be punished unduly, but the severitles were reserved for men guilty of house-burning, violence to women and assassination. There would be no treaty with them. They were in no sense soldiers.

Inquiry was made about the progress of military operations, and the reply was they were highly satisfactory. There had been were lighly satisfactory. There had been were lighly satisfactory.
